The EMIGRANT; OR, A ROMANCE OF THE ARCTIC.

-Such is the title of an original and exceedingly well written story, which will be commensed in the New York SUNDAY MERCURY

FOR TO-MORROW, APRIL 29TH.

The above tale will form the third of the popular series of "Ten Stories of New York Life, written on a Houseto," which have met jwith such distinguished favor from the readers of the Mercury; and the construction of this story is, perhaps, the most novel of any of the series hereotofore published. The scene is continually shifting, and the incicents are of that strong reality lituarizative of the dictum that "truth is stranger than fotion." Among the most powerful effects of the story is the loss of the magnificent Arctic. Until that is announced—and it is so in the suddenness of a thunder siap, just as the oatsstrophe was made shown a few months since—the reader will be at a loss in the power of identifying the occurrence with the general course of the magnificent since the reader will be at a loss in the power of identifying the occurrence with the general course of the magnificent pression will be one of the most finitering seatimony to the genius which has converted an apparently anomalous into a perfectly harmography of the most finitering seatimony to the genius which has converted an apparently anomalous into a perfectly harmography of the most finitering seatimony to the Start and the converted and an anomaly of the New York Sunday journals, and contains the city, which are to be found in no other paper published in this city, which the paper passesses in addition all the interest and attraction of a high-toned
